Alpine Waste & Recycling Wins Emerging Growth Award

COMMERCE CITY, Colo. (January 24, 2012) – Alpine Waste & Recycling, the largest fully integrated independent waste and recycling company in Colorado, was chosen as the winner of the 10th Annual Rocky Mountain Growth Conference’s Emerging Growth Award, which will be presented by The Association of Corporate Growth \(ACG\) at the Inverness Hotel on Tuesday, March 13.

Alpine Waste & Recycling has set the standard for growth in its industry through economic conditions both good and bad. Alpine began as a single truck operation in 1999; and in the following years, Alpine created its recycling division (named Altogether Recycling), established a single-stream recycling plant in north Denver, expanded the plant four years later, and opened a commercial composting service.

President John Griffith thanked the ACG for recognizing Alpine’s steady record of growth over the years. He said he is proud of Alpine’s responsiveness to customer demands, noting Alpine’s willingness and ability to meet and exceed patron expectations.

“Alpine has always responded swiftly to issues that customers present to us, and we have relied upon our record of innovation,” Griffith said. “Over the past several years, this philosophy has established Alpine as a leader in sustainability initiatives, in large part through our waste diversion programs such as our Altogether Recycling and composting efforts. We are especially pleased that so many lines of our business are beneficial to the environment. I would like to thank all of our employees, who have embraced our commitment to our customers and environmental stewardship.”
